The Challenge of Saying "No" to Pool Buyers

As a Watershape designer, landscape architect and educator, Jason Brownlee, is typically in the habit of embracing the opportunities that come his way. But as he explains here, sometimes saying no, or at least, not now, can be the more beneficial response. That's especially true in the current market where the demand is pushing watershapers in all categories to their practical limits.

Microbes Rule! (classic)

For as long as liquid water has supported life on our planet, a range of factors have played dynamic roles in sustaining balanced, untreated, wholly natural lakes and ponds, observes inventor and researcher Bruce Kania. By breaking things down and understanding the relationships between microbes and nutrients in water, he adds, watershapers are better able to mimic nature and create bodies of water that will stay clean and clear without artificial treatment

Why Swimming Boosts Your Brain

It's no secret that aerobic exercise can help stave off some of the ravages of aging, but according to neurobiologist, Seena Mathew, a growing body of research suggests that swimming might provide a unique boost to brain health. As she explains in this article published by theconversation.com "scientists are still trying to unravel how and why swimming, in particular, produces brain-enhancing effects."
