The Key to Collaboration

Designer Randy Angell believes in the power of working together, a value he learned as a kid singing in choirs. Today, he applies the idea of synergistic creativity to his design practice, bringing a team together to create unique environments based on a collection of talents working together.

Organic Artistry (classic)

To see what happens when a watershape is completely, entirely, organically linked to architecture, you need look no farther than the work of John Lautner and many of the projects he completed before his death in 1994. Mentored by Frank Lloyd Wright, Lautner saw swimming pools and other waterfeatures as integral components in compositions of great and enduring beauty, says Helena Arahuete, who was in turn mentored by Lautner and is now the principle architect in the firm that bears his name.

Happy Halloween

(Only in Oregon!)

It's an annual ritual that combines massive gourds and swimming pools, the Bauman

Pumpkin Festival features the splashy spectacle of dropping massive pumpkins into pool from high heights. This year, organized dropped a 1,200-pound pumpkin into an inflatable a above-ground pool from 100 feet. The exact purpose or meaning of this ritual is ill-defined, but it is certainly fun to watch.
