Featuring

Painting in Water

Watershape designer and builder, Steve Kenny, believes that water encompasses both art and science. While his day job is focused on running a company that designs, builds and services high-end residential and commercial swimming pools, he also takes time to explore his purely artistic instincts. The result is a body of water images that represent the beauty and inner mysteries of the world's most important and beautiful fluid matrix.

Shaping Perfection (classic)

Why spend tens of thousands of dollars for a freeway-strong substructure if you're not going to put a beautifully designed and well-constructed pool on top of all that stabilizing steel and concrete? In this classic article detailing the evolution of a spectacular installation on a fragile hillside, builder/designer David Tisherman describes what it takes to craft a shell worthy of so spectacular a setting.

In the Water, the World Falls Away

In this beautiful essay published online by WBUR, Boston's NPR station, food writer and swimming enthusiast Kathy Gunst, offers personal insights into the joy and tranquility of swimming in nature -- and toll it can take when going without it for months on end. "I swim until I feel something shift," she writes, "something that can only be described as an out-of-head experience."
