Lifeguard Shortage Stalls Pool Openings

Among the many challenges facing the pool industry, a shortage of lifeguards is keeping thousands of public pools across the country from opening. One possible solution may be to look to senior citizens as a possible source to fill the gap. After all, being a lifeguard is not restricted to the young.

Floating on Sunshine

"I want the house to look as though it is floating on water." That was what architect Victor Canas told Joan Roca when he was called out to visit this site on the northwestern coast of Costa Rica. It was a brilliant idea, he explains in this WS classic, certainly one that befitted the spectacular mountaintop setting and its breathtaking 360-degree views of rugged coastline, forest greenery and assorted perspectives to horizons in all directions.

Extracting Water from Dry Thin Air

Over a third of the world's population lives in arid climates where water is scarce. A new technology developed by scientists and engineers at the University of Texas at Austin have synthesized material that might be able to help water-insecure people access safe drinking water in areas where it doesn't rain.
