Teaming with History

The Arizona Biltmore is a truly historic property with a unique design pedigree. Crystal Fountains' David L'Heureux reports that his company's participation encompassed providing state-of-the-art fountain lighting and jet systems, as well as acting as a fountain design consultant. As he explains, working on such marquee projects means playing a key role on elite project teams.

New Satellite to Study Global Water Levels

The new Surface Water and Ocean Topography satellite, a joint venture between NASA and the French space agency Centre National d'Études Spatial, planned for nearly two decades, will measure water levels in greater detail than ever before. The mission is scheduled to launch on December 12 from Vandenberg Space Force Base, in California.

Water's Complex Human Narrative

The story of water and the need to control it is very much the story of human existence. According to author Giulio Boccaletti, efforts to transport and store water for agriculture and human consumption was a primary organizing force in human society, a phenomenon that lives on to this day.
