Whimsy by Design

Creating water playgrounds that appeal to multiple generations is both a science and an art, explains “playologist” Shelley Robinson. Here she profiles an enduring splash-pad project that was designed to delight kids and their parent alike with the use of custom features and large doses of imagination.

Chance Inventions

Toys that feature getting wet have a history of becoming iconic to the point it's hard to imagine summer without squirt guns, water slides or flotation devices. It may come as a surprise that some of the most popular water toys were not planned by their inventors, but instead were inspired by random observations.

Digging the Quarry (classic)

The Quarry Golf Club at La Quinta, Calif., is a significant point of pride for Ken Alperstein, managing partner at Pinnacle Design Co., a firm that specializes in creating landscapes and watershapes for golf courses nationwide. Here, he describes the waterfalls, streams, ponds, rockwork and landscaping that lend the setting such powerful charm.
