Cross Connections

Backyard watershape design is at its best when everything works together to complement the setting. In this case, explains Joe Dempsey, Jr., the spirit of integration included not only pure aesthetics but also the hillside engineering and construction, as well as sharing the home's energy-efficient heating system.

An Open Letter to the California Contractor's State License Board

In this open letter to the California Contractor's State License Board, Scott Cohen argues that the state should adopt mandatory continuing education requirements for pool contractor licensing and license renewals. It's a change he believes would ultimately protect contractors and consumers by reducing the number of construction defects.

Restoring the LA River

For most of the past century, natural waterways in Southern California have existed as lifeless concrete channels. Efforts to “regreen” some of those once-beautiful waters have given rise to hopes that the Los Angeles River, and others like it, will one day recapture their former natural health and riparian beauty.

The Jade Mountain Issue (Celebrating 25 Years of WaterShapes)

In April of 2007, WaterShapes devoted an entire issue to the creation of Jade Mountain, a visionary resort on the island of St. Lucia. The design, which included custom vanishing edge pools in every "sanctuary" was unlike anything that had ever been attempted. The result is a project that has raised the standard for beauty, water and romance.
